

Feedback and complaints

- How to have a say about your care
- How to get any concerns or complaints dealt with

Who is this factsheet for?

This factsheet is for anyone who has experience of care provided by the NHS in any part of Scotland.

What is this factsheet about?

The Charter of Patient Rights and Responsibilities says that:

- you have a right to have a say about your care, and
- you have a right to get your concerns and complaints dealt with.

This factsheet explains what this means for you.

‘You have the right to give feedback, make comments, or raise concerns or complaints about the health care you receive.’

The Charter of Patient Rights and Responsibilities 2012

Giving feedback about the NHS in Scotland

The NHS wants to hear about anything that matters to you. For example:

- you may want to thank staff or share your thoughts about something that’s been done well
- if you’re in hospital or have been there recently, you may want to share your views on your experience of care and the treatment you received, or about other things such as the food on the ward
- you may be concerned that you don’t have enough information about the care and treatment offered or about visiting hours, car parking or opening times.

How can I give my feedback?

You can give your feedback by:

- talking to a member of staff involved in your care – this can be the best way to give feedback and resolve issues quickly
- contacting your NHS Board by phone, email or online (see page 9 for how to do this)
- posting a story on Care Opinion (www.careopinion.org.uk)
- filling in a patient survey or questionnaire, or putting your comments in a suggestion box
- phoning the NHS inform Helpline on 0800 22 44 88
- telling the Patient Advice and Support Service (PASS) – see page 9 for details.

What happens to my feedback?

The NHS welcomes your feedback. It will be recorded and used to improve services.

Making a complaint about the NHS in Scotland

This section describes our procedure for handling complaints.

What is a complaint?

The NHS regards a complaint as “any expression of dissatisfaction about our action or lack of action, or about the standard of service provided by us or on our behalf”.

Who can complain?

- You can make a complaint if you are, or are likely to be, affected by something that an NHS Board or primary-care service provider such as GP or dentist has done or failed to do.
- If you are complaining for another person, the NHS Board or health service provider will need to check that the person has agreed to you making the complaint on their behalf. It will also need to check they have consented to personal information about their healthcare being shared as part of the complaints-handling process. If they have not agreed or consented, the NHS Board or service provider will need to take that into account when handling and responding to your complaint. However, all complaints are recorded and reviewed because this helps the NHS find ways of improving services.

- You can complain for another person if:
 - the person is a child and you are their parent, guardian or main carer and they are not mature enough to understand how to make a complaint – but if they are mature enough, they can make a complaint themselves or agree to someone else complaining on their behalf
 - you have a welfare power of attorney or a welfare guardianship order for someone who cannot make decisions for themselves, and the order permits you to make a complaint about health care
 - you are a relative of, or were in a relationship with, a patient who has died and you are concerned about how they were treated before they died, or
 - you are acting as an advocate for the patient (see page 7 for more about advocacy).

What can I complain about?

Things you can complain about using the NHS procedure include:

- care or treatment you have had or are having in the NHS
- anything to do with the place where you are seen, for example a GP practice, a hospital, a dental practice, an optician, a pharmacy, a prison health centre or an ambulance
- any NHS staff member involved in your care
- how NHS services in your local area are organised if this has affected your care or treatment.

If your complaint also involves another part of the NHS, or if it relates to a health service and a social work service, then staff may need to pass it on to someone there. They will explain how your complaint will be handled and who will respond to you. Wherever possible, organisations will work together to provide a single response to your complaint covering all the issues raised. If your complaint relates to a health service and a social work service, the response will depend on whether these services are being provided through a single, integrated health and social care partnership. For further details please ask the organisations you are complaining about.

Complaints that are dealt with under different procedures

Some things you may wish to complain about are not handled through the NHS complaints procedure. These include:

- private health care or treatment
- services not provided or funded by the NHS, and
- anything you are taking legal action about.

Staff receiving such a complaint will refer the matter to the appropriate person and inform you of this and the procedure you can use.

How do I complain?

If you can, first talk to a member of staff involved in your care. If you do this, they can try to sort out your complaint on the spot.

If you cannot or you do not wish to do this, you can ask to speak to a senior member of staff or the Feedback and Complaints Officer for the NHS organisation involved (see page 8 for contact details).

If you prefer to complain in writing rather than in person or over the phone, you can send a letter or an email to the relevant NHS organisation. When complaining, you should give:

- your full name and address (and the patient's full name and address if you are complaining for them)
- as much helpful information as possible about what happened, where it happened and when
- information about how you want the matter to be resolved, and
- your phone number, if you are happy to provide it, so that we can call you to discuss your complaint.

Giving us this information will help us clearly identify the problem and what we need to do to resolve things.

How long have I got to make a complaint?

The NHS has a time limit for accepting complaints. Normally, you must make your complaint within six months of:

- the event you want to complain about, or
- finding out you have a reason to complain, but no longer than 12 months after the event itself.

However, if you feel the time limit should not apply to your complaint, please speak to the person dealing with it. A complaint can sometimes be accepted after the time limit.

You can complain to the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman about an NHS decision not to accept your complaint (see page 8 for more information).

What if I change my mind after I've complained?

You can change your mind about making a complaint at any time. Please let the person handling your complaint know as soon as possible.

'You have the right to be told the outcome of any investigation into your concerns or complaints.'

The Charter of Patient Rights and Responsibilities 2012

What happens when I complain?

The NHS aims to resolve complaints quickly and as close to the point of service as possible. This could mean an on-the-spot apology and an explanation if something has clearly gone wrong, and immediate action to resolve the problem.

The NHS has a two-stage complaints procedure. There's also the right to take your complaint to the Ombudsman if you are unhappy with the Board's investigation.

The early resolution stage

If your complaint is straightforward and can be easily resolved, staff will try to sort it out in five working days or less, unless there are exceptional circumstances. This stage of the complaints process is called 'early resolution'.

The investigation stage

If your complaint is more serious and complex, or has not been resolved at the early resolution stage, it will need to be investigated. This is called the 'investigation stage'.

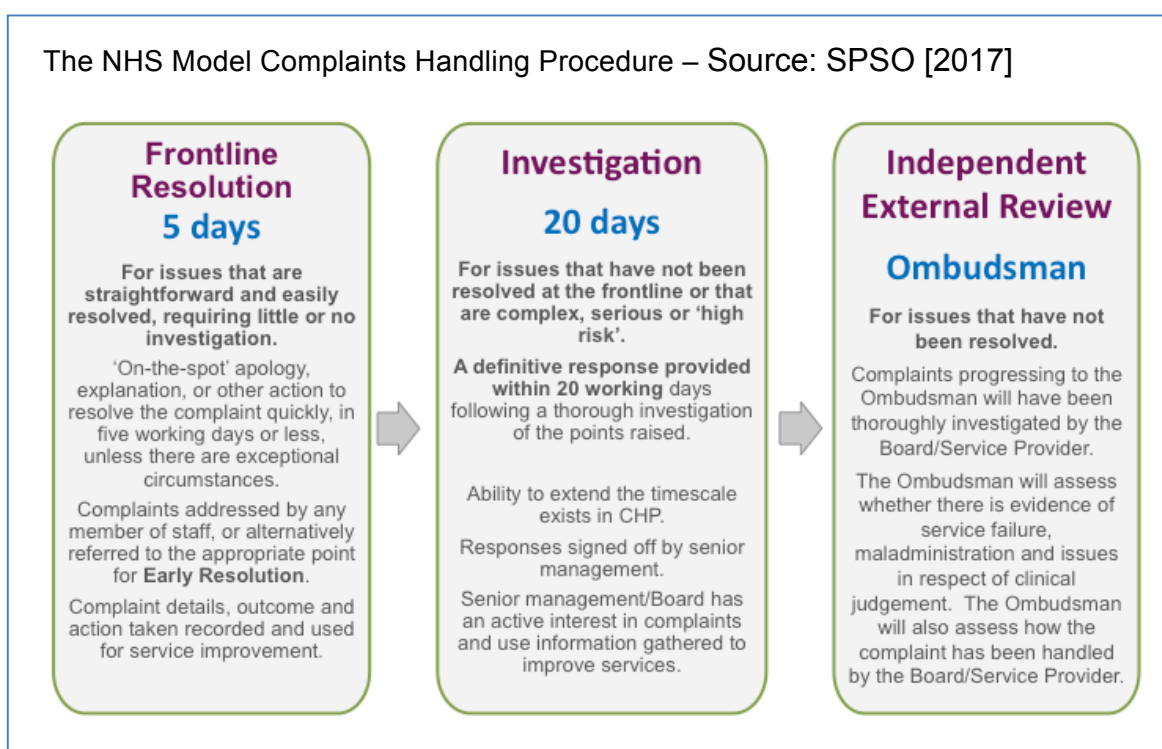

At the investigation stage, staff will write to you within three working days to acknowledge your complaint. They may also get in touch by phone to discuss your complaint with you and to understand what outcome you are looking for.

When will I get a full response?

Staff will write to you with a full response within 20 working days of receiving your complaint at the investigation stage. This response should:

- show that staff have looked into your complaint
- reply to all the points you made
- offer you an apology if things have gone wrong
- explain what action has been taken or will be taken to stop what you complained about happening again
- if necessary, explain why the NHS cannot do anything more about some parts of your complaint
- offer you the chance to talk to a member of staff if there is anything in the letter you don't understand, and
- include information about the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman in case you are unhappy with the response or the way your complaint has been handled and you want to take things further (see page 8 for more information).

In some cases, we may need more time to give you a full response and we may not be able to keep to these times. If this happens, staff will let you know and tell you why.

Who can help me with my complaint?

Other people can help you with advice:

Independent advice and support

- If you would like to speak to someone for advice or help with making a complaint, please ask a staff member for details about the independent Patient Advice and Support Service. It's available in your area through the local citizens advice bureau. See page 9 for contact details.

Advocacy

- If you want someone to help you express your views, you can ask for an advocate. An advocate is independent of the NHS. They can help make sure your views are heard and get you access to the information you need to make your own decisions. Your local NHS Board or the Feedback and Complaints Officer will be able to tell you about advocacy services in your area.

Mediation

- Some complaints can be resolved through mediation. This is a service where independent mediators help the parties to reach an agreement. You can ask for mediation or Health Boards may offer to provide it, but it can go ahead only if both parties agree to it. The Feedback and Complaints Officer at your local Health Board can tell you more about mediation.

'You have the right to independent advice and support to provide feedback, make comments, raise concerns or make a complaint.'

The Charter of Patient Rights and Responsibilities 2012

What if I'm not happy about the way the NHS has handled my complaint?

If the NHS has fully investigated your complaint and you're still not happy, you can ask the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman to look at it.

The Ombudsman cannot normally look at:

- a complaint that has not completed our complaints procedure, so please make sure it has done so before contacting the Ombudsman
- events that happened, or that you became aware of, more than 12 months ago, or
- a matter that has been or is being considered in court.
